

Christian Fired at Red Cross for Expressing Disagreement with Gay & Lesbian Pride Month

Check out the article here. This sort of thing is becoming more and more common, and is one of the reasons that Christians are starting to speak out more.

I had an experience like this at my old job, though I was not fired. During Gay & Lesbian Pride Month, I expressed my frustration with my workplace's attempt to have us all "celebrate" homosexuality and other sexual deviances. They posted pictures of homosexual & transexual teenagers, including a crossdresser, with descriptions of their "story." In light of this, I sent an e-mail to my HR Supervisor (who, as it may be, was a lesbian) expressing my disagreement with the indoctrination. I told her that, while I have always been known and will continue to be known as an employee who treats everyone with respect, I resent being told by my workplace what the moral status is of various sexual behaviors. What was being sold was not tolerance, but homosexual propaganda. Moreover, this served to create a hostile work environment for Christians. In the end, I was told too bad. I needed to decide if that was a place I could work and be comfortable.

That is the double standard that passes for "tolerance" nowadays. Funny that so many pushing for tolerance are really only tolerant of people that agree with them.
